INTRODUCTION

This handlist provides a quick guide to the Nonconformist registers of births, baptisms marriages and burials deposited with the Staffordshire and Stoke on Trent Archive Service, and of microfilm copies of pre-1837 registers held at The National Archives, including those of the Quakers.

The complexities of dealing with Nonconformist places of worship are considerable and the registers listed here represent only a proportion of a total number of churches and chapels which is virtually unknown. Nonconformist churches were built in enormous numbers during the nineteenth century, especially in the growing industrial areas. For example it is not unusual to find in one of Staffordshire's many small mining communities a Primitive, a Wesleyan and a New Connexion/United Methodist church as well as at least one other of another denomination. But many may have been open only a few years, while others merged together at later dates. The use of registers covering a wide geographical area that may have been carried about to different chapels also confuses the picture. This is the case particularly for the Methodist Circuits and the Quaker registers. Specialized and detailed local knowledge is often needed to reconstruct the population of Nonconformist churches in a particular area at any one time. This list cannot be used to give a true indication of the number of Nonconformist places of worship in any given area.

Nonconformist registers for the county have also been deposited elsewhere at:

Newcastle-under-Lyme Library, Ironmarket, Newcastle, ST5 1AT

Some denominations have central repositories of their own. Methodist records are at the John Rylands University Library, Deansgate, Manchester, M3 3 EH. These do not include local chapel registers but may be of help to those whose ancestors were Methodist preachers or prominent lay persons. The Presbyterian and the Congregational churches, now the United Reformed Church, hold some baptismal records in their repository at 86 Tavistock Place, London, WC1H 9RT. Unitarian records are often held by individual churches, although some have been deposited with the General Assembly of Unitarian and Free Christian Churches, Essex Hall, Essex Street, London, WC2R 3HY. Registers of some Baptist churches have been deposited at Regent's Park College, Pusey Street, Oxford, OX1 2LB. Finally there is a central repository for Quaker records (the Society of Friends) at Friends' House, Euston Road, London, NW1 2BJ including copies of registers of births, marriages and burials in semi-alphabetical order from the mid-seventeenth century onwards. Some Staffordshire Quaker registers are deposited also at the Cheshire Record Office, Duke Street, Chester CH1 1RL (recordoffice@cheshire.gov.uk)

The background to Nonconformist registration

Most denominations initially just kept registers of baptisms. Some kept burial registers as well when they were able to establish their own burial grounds, but this was quite unusual and most Nonconformist burials would have taken place at the appropriate Anglican church or civil cemetery. After the introduction of civil registration in 1837, an Act of 1840 made it possible for pre-registration registers to be deposited with the Registrar General. These are now at The National Archives, and copies of these are held in the Archive Service on microfilm.

Only Quakers and Jews were exempt from the requirement of Hardwicke's Marriage Act of 1753 that all marriages must take place in the Church of England. After the Dissenter's Marriage Act of 1836, (linked to the introduction of Civil Registration), Nonconformist chapels could be licensed for marriages but the local Registrar had to attend and the marriage was registered in his registers. Only after 1898 could Nonconformist churches appoint an authorised person as their own registrar, and it is after this is that the vast majority of Nonconformist marriage registers begin.

Methodists

From the late 18th century there were two main sections of the Methodist Church, the Wesleyan Methodists and the Primitive Methodists. There was also a smaller group called the Methodist New Connexion. The latter united in 1907 with two small groups called the Bible Christian Methodists and the United Methodist Free Churches, to form the United Methodist Church. So as a general rule, the use of the term United Methodist only relates to former New Connexion churches after 1907. The United Methodist Church then merged with the Wesleyan Methodists and the Primitive Methodists in 1932 to form the Methodist Church of Great Britain.

Methodism organised itself into circuits of chapels visited by travelling preachers. Especially in the eighteenth and early part of the nineteenth century these circuits could be geographically very extensive. This system of organisation led to the keeping of registers at circuit rather than chapel level. As the constituent chapels of the circuit varied or as chapels began to keep their own register, it is very difficult to be precise as to the area/chapels covered at any one time by these type of registers. Places mentioned in Circuit registers are cross-referenced where possible.

It is also not always possible to tally registers for a more modern Methodist church with those of the earlier denominations, particularly as locations may have changed, or as the early registers often do not include a street location. In addition, many churches kept their own copies of the pre-1837 registers called in by the General Register Office, and continued to keep them for later entries, but the churches are not always identified in exactly the same description. It has not been possible to make a detailed check of entries to confirm that such registers are indeed duplicates, or whether registers of different date belong to a single continuing church. Unless this is clearly proved, they may be listed in this guide as though they relate to separate churches.

Religious Society of Friends (Quakers)

The Quakers, unlike other non-conformists religions, rejected formal church services. Many Quakers would not use the Anglican Church for meetings, though some Quakers would use it for special events, such as conducting burials. The first quarterly and monthly meetings were held in 1654 and tended to keep registers of birth, marriage and burials, which became standardised in 1776. Dates are normally given as numbers, for example, the eleventh day of the second month, rather than Thursday 2nd February. This is because Quakers reject the usual names for the days and months that were derived from pagan gods. The registers listed here at the end of this list are microfilm copies of original Quaker registers that can be found in The National Archives, Kew. In addition, there are some burial ground registers that were collected by the Diocese of Lichfield. Later registers are retained by the Quaker Registrar for the Staffordshire Monthly (now Area) Meeting.

Location of original registers and microform copies

Original registers held by the Archive Service are at Staffordshire Record Office, Stoke on Trent City Archives and Lichfield Record Office. The City Archives as a general rule holds registers only for churches within the City boundary. Lichfield Record Office holds registers for the Lichfield area, the Tamworth area, and the Burton area. Microfiches for the latter are also held at the Burton Local and Family History Centre.

There is some overlap in holdings, because some registers have been deposited at a Circuit level, which may not exactly correspond with the normal collecting areas of the respective archive offices. This has the effect that the baptism and marriage registers even for some church are split between two offices, having been deposited on different occasions by different organizations. It is hoped that the distribution of microform copies lessens the effect of these anomalies. For this purpose, a separate column for the location of microform copies has been included.

The Archive Service has a programme of microfilming its registers with a starting date of 1925 or earlier, and making these available on microfiche. Therefore the coverage for fiches is not necessarily the same as those for original registers, and researchers should check in advance in the cases where the fiches are not in the same location as the originals. In addition, some registers that have been deposited more recently may not yet have been microfilmed and so will only be available as originals. The exception to the 1925 filming date are the registers that were previously held at the former Burton on Trent Archives. All of these registers were filmed regardless of date, so that copies could be made available at the Burton Local and Family History Centre.

QUAKER REGISTERS

Note: Several of these registers overlap in dates. Some appear to relate to more specific areas, others are more general to the wider area. Some of the registers contain alphabetical indexes. For birth registers, the names and status of parents and place of residence are normally recorded. For marriages, names and status of fathers, and place of residence are normally recorded. For burials, status, residence and date of death are normally recorded. Whether the family are “Members” is also recorded in some registers.
